On a Hill-Top.

One afternoon, in Central Park, when the late spring was making strenuous efforts to assist herself by means of a shivering fringe of green hung upon naked boughs, and by a tinge of red, like a blush for her tardiness, over the bushes of Pyrus japonica, the main drive offered the usual spectacle of pleasure-seekers on wheels, rolling at a discreet rate of speed between Fifty-ninth street and One-hundred and-tenth street, and back again, while keeping carefully in view of each other's equipages, horses, grooms, and gowns.

Passing in review the rapid succession of coaches, landaus, victorias, broughams, wagonettes, T carts, tilburys and village carts, sprinkled with less pretending buggies and hansom-cabs, a young man on horse kept his spirited steed in check, curveting back and forth at the entrance of one of the equestrain roads crossing the principal drive, until a trig policeman began to cast upon him side glances of a decidedly investigating character. Evidently the young man's search was vain, for a look of annoyance came upon his open face, and giving his horse an unreasonable cut with the riding-stick, he at last consented to gallop away from the spot he had so long haunted. At that exact moment another rider cantering lightly along the bridle path, emerged from the trees ahead, bringing face to face with him a pretty girl with golden hair, and a bunch of narcissus in the breast of her well-cut habit.

"You told me you were to drive with your mamma!" abruptly exclaimed the young gentleman; to which the lovely Amazon replied, blushing slightly and tossing her head, that she could not know she was obliged to render an exact account of her doings to every person with whom she might chance to dance at Mrs. Gardiner's ball. The groom coming up at this juncture diverted conversation from an apparently threatening channel. In the most natural manner our young gentleman's horse was turned, and the couple were making their way through the dreary suburb on the west side of the park, to emerge upon the beautiful Riverside Drive. Here a wide and admirably made road runs parallel with the Hudson, whose tranquil bosom, skimmed by white-winged sail-boats or scarred by bustling steamers along the channel, reflects, on the farther side, the wood-crowned summits of the Palisades and the colors of the sky.

"To enjoy the Riverside," the young man said, "one should resemble the 'true love' of the early English poet, who 'looks not back, his eyes are fixt afore.' Let me recommend you to impose a forfeit on yourself for turning your head one moment from the left as we follow up the avenue. In this way you may be able to preserve the illusion that your are out of town."

"It's all of a piece with everything here," the girl answered, with a discontented glance at the landscape on the right. There, amid a curious combination of squalor and ambitious architecture, she chanced to see the grassy slope in front of a squatter's shanty, where in a wilderness of rubbish and tomato cans, two sportive goats were assuming the attitude of the supporters of the British coat of arms. Beyond an open expanse of rocky hillside, streets and boulevards in various stages of constructions were to be seen. To Miss Caroline Heath, aged twenty-one, recently returned from a six years' residence in Europe, the incompleteness of American affairs in general was a source of continual comment. Edgar Barclay, on the contray, the son of a Western man, who after making a fortune in Cleveland had moved to New York to spend it, was a warm defender of our peculiar institutions, and coming from other lips than those of the present critic, would have resented unflattering comments upon them with emphasis.

They had now turned into a broad boulevard, and followed it to an end, indicated by the presence of workmen with their impediments making a barrier across the road.

"Let us go on," Carry urged. "Yonder, on that hilltop, I see a genuine old house that must have been there since the Revolution at least. I am determined to ride up and have a peep at it.

Apparently uninhabitated but for a pale ring of smoke from the kitchen chimney, the old house stood in melancholy isolation upon a bluff overlooking the river. The avenue there in process of construction had ruthlessly shaved off the near side of the hill, leaving exposed a steep and gravelly incline crowned with the straggling grasses of an ancient lawn. Around the white columns of the portico grew walnut and chestnut trees, and in the garden at the rear was seen a ruined summer house, and several broken statutes arising amid an unpruned growth of box. Cocking their ears cautiously at the unusualness of the proceeding, the horses consented to be guided up a precipitous path along the edge of the declivity, Barclay conscious of a feeling of relief when his adventurous young comrade had finally attained her wish, and stood facing the moss-grown portico.

"Nobody lives here, that's plain," said willful Caroline. "Mr. Barclay, I am determined to explore."

So saying, she slipped lightly from the saddle, gathered up her jaunty habit, and ran around through the weedy garden at the side. Barclay, consigning his horse to the groom, followed in time to see her engaged in active conversation with a deaf old dame who emerged from a moldy kitchen at the rear.

"She says we may have water from the well, and leave to look at this lovely river view," cried the explorer. "It appears that the house is owned by one maiden lady, whose family has always lived here. If I may trust to my hitherto infallible powers of intuition, the mistress is a little out of repair in her upper story, and the maid is afraid of her. Come, Mr. Barclay, turn away at this handle. How long is it since I have had the satisfaction of drinking from the 'moss-covered bucket that hangs in the well?' There that's deliciously cold and pure. Do you see, this garden must have been a stately one in its prime. I wonder if the ancient dragon would be induced to let us have a glimpse of the interior of the house? I'm positively wild to try."

Nobody withstood Caroline, so Barclay was not particularly surprised to see her return from a second interview with the old woman, beckoning him with a mysterious forefinger.

"We're to see the gound-floor. It is the hour for Miss Silman's afternoon nap, when she never comes down stairs. Hush! tread like a burglar, and follow me."

In the wake of the ancient guardian our two young people went from one room to another, filled with handsome furniture of the pattern peculiar to a century ago. Old mahogany, fluted fire-boards, stiff chairs, convex mirrors, black-framed mezzotints, knobs of brass or crystal, there ruled supreme, their sway undisputed by the appendages of modern luxury as seen everywhere today. It was in the best parlor that their guide came to a halt, waving her withered hand with a faint show of pride in its faded splendor.

"That's all there is to it," she said, in a croaking voice. "I guess them things is solid."

"Either I am dreaming or that portrait of the lady in the red frock with balloon sleeves resembles you," Caroline suddenly exclaimed, turning upon Barclay an astonished gaze. "She is enough like you to be your—what?" She paused puzzled by the date.

"My great-grandmother, great-aunt—what you will," said Barclay, laughing. "I wish I were lucky enough to be able to lay claim to her, but unfortunately if we have any weird respectability of this kind in the east, I have yet to be informed of it. My mother, who died in my childhood, was born west, and my father is a westerner, root and branch."

"It is astonishing," pursued Caroline; and even the purblind eyes of the old woman lighted with something like assent.

"She 'ain't no one belongin' to her I ever heered of," croaked the old creature, pointing upward with her thumb. "The last on 'em to die was Miss Tabitha, and she's Miss Louise, They was great folks once, I've heerd tell, but that was before I came here. She was pinchin' poor till the city tuk the place to run a road through, an' now they say there's a fortune in the bank for her. She don't spend none of it, sartin sure. The two of us don't eat more'n'd keep a mouse from starvin', an' there ain't nobody else."

"I breathe freer," Caroline said, when, after presenting a gratuity to their guide, the two mounted again and rode out of the enclosure. "After all, I like tho sunshine best. But I wish I had seen the queer old lady; and to that portait, it is simply your double, deny it as you may."

"I am more occupied in wondering if I can get my horse by that steam-drill down yonder," Edgar said. "He has a rooted objection to anything of the kind, and this path does not offer much room for antics on his part. Your gray is quiet, Miss Heath; you had better wait here, and let me lead the way."

Hardly had he spoken when the engine beneath them sent forth a sudden rush of hissing steam. Caroline repressed an exclamation of alarm. Barclay's horse, rearing violenty, grazed the edge of the steep declivity, then set off at a run. Half-way to the bottom he slipped, his rider falling over his head, the horse rolling completely over, and recovering himself to stand shivering with terror beside Barclay's prostrate form. Before a number of men from the gang at work below could reach him, Caroline was at his side, the groom following. Barclay, catching one glimpse of the face bent over him, tried to speak re-assuringly, but fainted in the effort. Without consulting the young lady, the men ran up to the house upon the hill, returning with a shutter, upon which they carried the injured man gently along the path he had just descended into the house, laying him down without interference from its guardian in the dim old parlor immediately beneath the portrait of the lady with the sleeves. The bustle of their entrance stirred from her solitude upstairs the other dweller in this silent mansion. Gliding down like a wraith came a tall woman dressed in gray, with melancholy eyes and chill lips that seemingly had never known a smile.

"Open the window and give him air," cried Caroline, unheeding the approach of the mistress of the house.

"Who gives orders for me?" she said, in a monotonous voice. "It is years since those front windows have been opened."

"It is a matter of life and death," answered the girl imperiously, and without further opposition the stiff blinds were thrown back, letting in a flood of afternoon sunlight that flowed in a golden stream across the sufferer's temporary couch. Barclay's face thus revealed to view was untouched by wound or stain. He seemed quietly asleep.

"If the doctor would only come!" began Caroline, interlacing her cold hands. There was an interruption to the quiet of the room, a strange sound, half sob, half laughter, coming from the ghostly mistress of the house. Caroline looked up to see the old woman kneeling at Barclay's side, her dull eyes kindled into a sudden rapture of recognition.

"It is Margaret's son. I knew I should see one of them before I died. Oh, my poor wronged sister! After so many years! Thank God! thank God!"

"You'd better coax the old lady to go upstairs again," said one of the workmen to the servant, touching his forehead significantly. It was evident that all present agreed in his estimate of her mental equilibrium. But until the arrival of the doctor the gray old woman held the unconscious sufferer's hand in hers, from time to time fondling it against her cheek, and crooning over it words of tenderness. When the surgeon came, Caroline, passing her arm round her shoulders, led her from the room.

An hour later, Mr. Barclay, accompanied by Edgar's stepmother, answered the summons sent them by telephone in the neighborhood, appearing to swell the anxious little group waiting in the dusky hall outside the sick room. Edgar had returned to consciousness, but the injury to his leg was exquisitely painful, requiring nicest treatment. Until the arrival of their own family physician, the doctor in charge refused to take the responsibility of sanctioning the removal of his patient. The distressed father walked to and fro in moody silence, and when twilight brought Dr. Gray, urged him to say that Edgar might be carried in an ambulance to his home.

"On no account," said the doctor. "I can't imagine anything more foolish. Unless these people positively turn you out, he should stay here. His situation is extremely critical. I cannot answer for the consequences of a change."

"Here, in this old rattle-trap, with a mad woman for a keeper?" the impatient father wanted to say, but he substituted for it the milder suggestion that they had no claim upon the owner of the house.

"The child of Margaret Lothrop has every claim," said the same hollow voice that had startled all a little while before. At his elbow stood the ghost-like gray lady.

"Hallo!" said Mr. Barclay, astonished. "That's an odd coincidence. My first wife's mother was married twice, I believe, and her first husband's name was surely Lothrop. Edgar's grandmother came from the East, too, though she talked about her early home."

And so it was that, by a strange guidance of fate's leading-strings Margaret Lothrop's grandson was brought into intimate relations with his sole surviving relative upon his mother's side; one who through half a century of alienation and of silence had brooded over the image of her best-loved sister with ever-increasing intensity. Between the handsome lad who for days lay there beneath his grandmother's portrait uncertain whether death or life would claim him as their prize, and the pallid shade of what once was handsome Lois Stillman, Caroline was the link of warm humanity.

Until the young man's extremity had given place to the joyful promise of convalescense, Carry made daily pilgrimages to the hill-top. Then her visits ceased altogether, until one afternoon, when June had clothed the old brown with roses, she accepted a beseeching invitation from the invalid to have a cup of tea with Aunt Lois and himself. She found them in the well-remembered parlor, sitting, she even fancied, hand in hand, but by-and-by Aunt Lois arose and stole away. Soon she came back, bearing in her hand an antique string of pearls.

"These were left by Margaret when she went away to be married against our will," the old lady said solemnly. "Through poverty and sorrow I have kept them, hoping that some day one of Margaret's descents would come back to receive them at my hands. Now that Edgar is to have all the rest, I want Caroline to wear these as a token of my love and gratitude."

"You are giving them to Margaret's granddaughter after all, Aunt Lois," the young man said triumphantly. and then only for the first time in many a long year tears came into Miss Stillman's eyes, but they were happy ones.

Her Spending Money.

A young girl once complained to her aunt that her father did not give her any spending-money. The aunt was a kind-hearted woman, and thinking to make her niece happy, she presented her with a ten dollar bill. The young lady was delighted, of course, and profuse in her thanks. Shortly after she went on a walk, and upon her return proudly exhibited to her aunt a handsome purse and a gold mounted drawing pencil. She did not actually need either of these articles, but they were pretty and took her fancy. The cost of them were seven dollars. The pencil was lost before many days, and as the remaining three dollars were frittered away, there was little use for the purse. The good aunt was at no loss to see why the father withheld pocket-money from his daughter, and thereafter she herself found some other use for her ten-dollar bills. It should be added that this young lady called herself an economical girl. When she had no spending money she could get along bravely without many things which her soul craved. Yet our readers can judge for themselves, from the incident above related, whether she had the true idea of economy or not. Thrift and economy are greatly advocated as desirable virtues. But these do not mean simply going without what is needed. Economy is to get the most possible out of a dollar; not to waste it and then be driven to practice self-denial. There is a great difference even among very young people in this regard. Give two boys or girls a dollar, and often you will discover when the cash is spent that one girl has an equivalent to show for it. She has her full money's worth of something desirable. This is economy. The other can hardly tell where the money is gone. It has been so foolishly expended that she might almost as well have lighted the fire with it. It is not difficult to acquire habits of true economy, but the practice of it should begin with small sums—the dimes and quarters—and childhood is the time to take the first lesson.

"Bring me a Dozen."

When Congressman Lawler, of Chicago, made his first visit to New York some years ago, a friend invited him to a restaurant, where they called for soft-shell crabs. Lawler had never seen any before and did not know what they were. He liked them, however, and a few days afterward, wishing to again regale himself with some of the toothsome crustaceans, he hunted up the restaurant, walked in and sat down at a table; but he had forgotten the name of the food he desired. Looking over a bill of fare, he saw "lobsters." He called the waiter and said: 'Waiter, have you any lobsters?' 'Yes,' said the waiter. 'Bring me a dozen,' said Lawler. 'A dozen!' exclaimed the waiter in astonishment. Lawler saw that he had made a mistake, but he was not going to admit it. 'Confound you,' he said, 'don't you suppose I know what I want? Bring me a dozen.' The table was cleared of everything that was on it, and Lawler pitched in. He ate all he possibly could, called for a glass of brandy, looked up at the waiter, and said: 'Waiter, I was not as hungry as I thought I was. How much is the bill?' Fourteen dollars and fifty cents.' 'Why, it is not as much as I thought it would be,' said Lawler. 'Here, you needn't mind the change,' and, handing the waiter $15, Mr. Lawler walked out.

Jefferson and the Boy.

One day as Jefferson was riding on horseback through Virginia on his way from Washington to Monticello he came upon a boy trudging along with his clothes in a satchel which hung on a stick from his shoulder. He was motioned to get in, and in a moment he was sitting by the side of the President, who opened the conversation by asking him who he was and where he was going. He replied that his name was Morgan and that he was going home from school, and continued by putting the same questions to the President, saying, 'I beg your pardon, stranger, but what might your name be?'

The President replied, 'My name is Thomas Jefferson.'

The boy looked up astonished and asked:

'Not Tom Jefferson, President of the United States?'

'Yes,' replied Jefferson, and as he did so the boy jumped from the gig and into the road, saying, 'I have heard of you, Tom Jefferson. My father says you are a rascal, and wouldn't he thrash me if he caught me ridin' with you. Father knows you and he thinks you are the biggest scoundrel in the country!'

The President was so amused at the boy's charming candor that he invited him to the carriage and brought him to his journey's end, urging him before leaving to call upon him at Washington, promising him anything he desired should he honor him with a visit.

'You'll not forget me?' asked the enfant terrible.

'Not I,' replied Jefferson.

A year or thereabout after this occurrence young Morgan, becoming disgusted with things about home, ran off to Washington, trudging his way with staff and gripsack, and covered with mud and dust and clay made his way to the White House and walked boldly into a room where he saw Jefferson bending over a table writing. He went up to him and laying his hand on his shoulder shouted: 'Hello, Tom Jefferson, I've come after that office.' The President looked up, but could not remember the boy. Noting his amazed look, young Morgan continued: 'There, I told you you would not remember me when I came here.' Jefferson replied that his face was familiar, and on Morgan telling who he was the President treated him kindly, and asked him to be seated. He then called a servant and sent the boy off to be brushed up, asking him if he had another suit of clothes, to which he replied that he had. He was then given a room in the White House, and the President told him to look about for a few days and see what kind of an office he wanted. This young Morgan did, and at the end of the first day told Jefferson he believed he would take a colonelcy in the army. President Jefferson laughed and told him that colonels were always old men. He must take something else, but not be in a hurry—to look around and see the city. He then sent a midshipman with him to make things pleasant for him, and in a day or two young Morgan decided that he would rather be a midshipman than anything else. Jefferson at once gave him the appointment, and he went on a ship immediately. He made a splendid naval officer, and he died a commodore.

The Students Laughed.

A writer in the "Vossiche Zeitung," gives an anecdote of the famous Orientalist, Gesenius, which has never before been published. He announced a series of lectures to his class in the university on the "Books of Moses." His popularity caused the lecture-room to be crowded, and when the professor entered there was not a vacant seat in the auditorium. Gesenius began, as usual, with the statement of his theme in the opening words of the lecture, 'Gentlemen,' said he, 'Genesis is not as old as is generally believed.' In an instant the sentence was greeted with irrepressible peals of laughter from every quarter of the lecture-room; and the startled professor was unable to proceed to his next sentence. It is doubtful whether the old scholar perceived the true ground of this odd reception of his opening statement. The fact is, the Semitic enthusiast had five daughters, all of whom were unmarried, and the students had nicknamed them after the five books of the Pentateuch. The eldest of these old maids was known to the young men as 'Genesis.' So they laughed, and no wonder they did so.

Why the Banker Shed a Tear.

'It is sad to think,' sighed the cashier as he walked into the night with his valise in hand and gazed upon the massive marble bank building, 'sad to think that I must leave that noble structure behind me. But I must do so. I cannot take it with me.'

And dropping a tear he gripped his valise with a tighter grip and hurried off to catch the Montreal train.

Cheating the Bees.

A Wayne county farmer had succeeded in earning a place in history along with the Connecticut man who invented wooden nutmegs. He lives between Detroit and Dearborn, on Michigan avenue, in a vine-covered cottage back a little way from the road. On the front fence appears the sign, 'White clover honey.' Back of the house is an airy apiary with all the modern inventions for the care of bees, and nearly fifty hives sounded with the cheerful humming of the busy honey makers.

A representative of the Free Press quite by accident, called at the house and found no one at home, and while sitting by an old well curb refreshing himself with cool water from an old oaken bucket, his attention was called to the action of the bees. The cottage is surrounded with roses in full bloom, but these bees did not as bees used to do, but instead were swarming around a large tray which stood near by, and were flying back and forth to their hives. In this tray was half an inch of a sticky mass that looked like syrup. Little sticks were strewn over this substance, and on these the bees were alighting, and, after taking some, flew back to the hives.

'Gather honey all the day
From every opening flower,'

'What do you want o' them bees?'

The intruder started up and found a barefooted lad standing before him.

'What are the bees taking?' we asked.

'What do you want to know for? Dad said we wasn't to tell any one anything about it.'

'I'll give you a quarter if you will,' said the reporter, now thoroughly interested.

'Well, I dunno what it is. Dad gets it from town in a bar'l. Here's what he gits it in,' pointing to a large cask.

On the end of the barrel was the stencil mark, '200 lbs. grape sugar from Michigan Grape Sugar Manufactory.'

'Is that glucose the bees are getting?'

'It's something that dad gits out of that bar'l, that's all I know about it.'

The inquiring visitor tasted it. There was an unmistakable gum drop flavor to it.

'We had hard work to get the bees nsed to it. Dad put in a lot of syrup at first, but the bees take it straight now.'

'How long does it take to fill a hive?'

'Not near so long as it does when they have to gather the honey from flowers. We've taken out a lot this year already.'

The boy brought out of the house a box of glucose honey which looked as clear and inviting as though the sweets had been distilled from the purest flowers.

'Do you eat it?' the boy was asked.

'Sometimes. It ain't so good as the other kind, but it's just as good to sell. Say, don't you ever give me away to dad, or he'll skin me.'—Detroit Free Press.

Some Derivations.

The word "pamphlet" is derived from the name of a Greek author, Pamphylia, who compiled a history of of the world in thirty-five little books.

"Punch and Judy" is a contraction from Pontius and Judas. It is a relic of an old "miracle play," in which the actors were Pontius Pilate and Judas Iscariot.

"Bigot" is from Visigotha, in which the fierce and intolerant Arianism of the Visigoth, conqueror of Spain, is handed down from infancy.

"Humbug" is from Hamburg; a piece of Hamburg news; was in Germany a provervial expression for false political rumors.

"Gause" derives its name from Gaza, where it was first made.

"Tabby cat" is all unconscious that her name is derived from Atab, a famous street in Bagdad inhabited by the manufacturers of silken stuffs called atab, or taffety—the wavy markings of the watered silks resembling pussy's coat.

'Old Scratch" is the demon Skratti who still survives in the superstitions of Northern Europe.

"Old Nick" is none other than Nikir, the dangerous water demon of Scandinavian legend.

The lemon takes its name from the City of Lima.

The Snake Guillotine.

The mowing machine is peculiarly fatal to snakes. In their accredited wisdom they do not start to run away until the evidence of danger is upon them. They then raise their heads just high enough to reach above the blades, when they are decapitated. The charge is so sudden that the body of the snake springs high enough to reach the blades ere the fatal knives pass completely over.

G W RUMBERGER, Secretary. R M MAGEE, Chairman.

DAY by day the political sky grows darker for Matthew S. Quay. Some time ago we told our readers that the independent republican element was by no means pleased with the nomination of Boss Quay for state treasurer. As the campaign waxes warmer the voice of that opposing element makes itself heard here and there. Hon. Charles Wolf, the renowned independent leader of Union county, has proclaimed his intention of "not voting for Quay." The republican representative from Erie county, Hon. Silverthorn, is opposed to Quay. The independent republican newspaper of Delaware county, Chairman Cooper's home, pitches into Quay in a decisive and merciless manner. Last but not least, Geo. E. Mapes, an ex-representative in the assembly from Venango County and at present a resident of Philadelphia in a recent interview with a Times reporter, furnished a brief sketch of the Kemble bribery scandal, which was up for trial in 1880, and at which Kemble and three other members plead guilty of bribing voters in the assembly to cast their ballots in favor of the bill appropriating $4 000,000 to pay the losses caused by the Pittsburg riots in 1877. Mr. Mapes winds up by the following remarks alluding directly to the Republican candidate for State Treasurer:

"Matthew S. Quay, the present Republican candidate for State Treasurer, was a member of the Pardon Board. His recommendation of the pardons in these cases ought to cost him Republican votes. The venerable Judge Pearson, himself an ardent Republican, in his charge to the Grand Jury that found the indictments against Kemble and his associates, and again in his charge to the jury that convicted Petroff, characterized bribery as a crime that struck at the very foundations of society and government. Mr. Quay by his official action as a member of the Pardon Board, declared that he committed no crime at all, or of so trivial a nature as not to deserve serious punishment. There is no evidence that he has changed his views, or that he would not do the same thing over again if he had the opportunity. The Republicans who take the Pearson view of the crime of bribery cannot consistently vote for the man who took the Quay view of it. I have too high an opinion of the Republicans of Pennsylvania not to think that there are thousands of them who will take the Pearson rather than the Quay view of the matter.

THE fair of the State Agricultural Society, which began at Philadelphia yesterday, according to press reports is a grand exhibition of the most valuable cattle in the country, a large collection of imported horses, about 700 dogs, and a fine display of fruit and flowers.

EVERY day the daily papers contain large lists of newly appointed postmasters all over the United States. And there is waling and teeth gnashing among the "retired partisans."

Business Reviving.

The following encouraging paragraphs from an editorial in Saturday's Philadelphia Times should inspire all business men with hope and gives clear reasons why we may look for better times in the near future:

The general revival of business is visible on every side. It is no speculative boom whose ebb is ever as sudden as its flow. It is not in any degree the effect of combination to force the temporary advance of values. It is not the birth of Third street or of Wall street. It is the natural, logical returning tide of business prosperity that has its fountain in the productive wealth, the enforced frugality and the general solvency of the country. Never in the history of the last quarter of a century were all business and industrial circles as conservative as they are to-day, and the revival of business now certainly at hand, must be substantial and enduring because it has the broadest and safest basis on which to rest.

In all the many seasons of honest prosperity of the past, this country has never been as universally prosperous as it is to-day. The balance of trade is well maintained in our favor; the crops of the North and West furnish an immense surplus for the markets of the world; the staples of the South score up in the hundreds of millions in excess of the average yield; the mines and mills are quickened by the steadily increased demand for their products; industry is slowly but surely commanding better wages and is increasing its consumption; the general and crushing indebtedness that prevailed among the people of all conditions of life ten years ago, has been reduced to the minimum; money is called for to enter into the productive enterprises of life and commands solvent and prudent borrowers, and there is not a channel of industry, commeree or trade that is not to-day sensibly affected by the general and healthy improvement of the times.

There will be no return to what is often thoughtlessly called the prosperous times which prevailed from 1861 to 1873. They were the inflamed fevers of a diseased system, and could be followed only by fearful prostration. The standard of money was degraded by the necessities of war; inflation ran riot in all channels of business; speculation reached a flood-tide and swept all classes into its fatal whirlpool; profligacy debauched society, politics, religion and business, and integrity and economy were shamed by speculation and shoddy. The inevitable return to honest business landmarks was tedious and costly, but it has come at last. Tens of thousands are left behind as the wrecks of inflation and business demoralization; but the survivors have the lessons of experience, and nearly ten years of business depression have schooled all in the safe methods which are the only sources of prosperity. Money will never again command more than half the income it commanded twenty years ago; fortunes can no longer be made in a year or a dozen years in legitimate business, and only legitimate business can now promise success; stocks can no longer be watered or bonds multiplied in speculative concave, to tax the producing industry of the land, and the old channels of our fathers, brightened and quickened by our intelligent and honest progress, are to become the fountains of fortune and of the greater wealth of content. Legitimate business with its thousands of channels of enterprise, will make each the channel of thrift, and employer and employed, producer and consumer, will enjoy alike the blesings of a revived prosperity that promises to be as substantial and enduring as it is welcome.

The President's Brother-in-Law in Office.

From the Phila. TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18.—The President to day appointed N. B. Bacon to be Superintendent of Public Buildings at Toledo, O. Bacon was a candidate some time ago for Superyising Architect of the Treasury, but it was said at the time that the President refused the appointment because Bacon was his brother-in-law. Since that time a candidate for a post office in the West laid great stress upon the fact that his name was Cleveland and he claimed to be a cousin of the President. The latter, in refusing to make the appointment, said that he didn't know whether the applicant was a cousin or not, but for fear he might be a relative the appointment could not be made. It is said that Bacon's appointment was made at the solicitation of Mr. Manning, Bacon being a very competent architect and an excellent man.

A Theological Treasury Clerk.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. — The brightest preacher in Washington is a Treasury clerk by the name of Wright. He is a Doctor of Divinity and a graduate also of the Columbia Law School of this city. He came to Washington four or five years ago, expecting to secure a mission abroad where he desired to live some years, but failed in this and there being no consulate obtainable through Mr. Windom he got a clerkship in the Treasury, where he has proved a most efficient accountant. This summer he has been temporary pastor of the Foundry Church, and the congregation is wild with delight over him, there being some talk of securing him permanently. He is a profound scholar and a most eloquent speaker. He preached a number of years in Minnesota, but was obliged to abandon the pulpit on account of illness.

Dr. Swope Renominated for Congress.

MECHANICSBURG, Sept. 16.—The democratic conferees of Cumberland, Adams and York counties met to day at a Mount Holly Springs, this county. They organized with Dr. B. F. Porter, of York as Chairman, and A. J. Beltzel, of Cumberland, as Secretary, and unanimously renominated Dr. John A. Swope for congress, to fill the term to which the late William A. Duncan was elected last November.

Malcolm Hay Very Feeble.

From the Phila. TIMES.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 18.—Malcolm Hay, late First Assistant Postmaster General, returned to this city this evening from Cresson Springs in a very feeble condition of health. He was removed to his home in an ambulance, being too weak to make the journey in an ordinary conveyance. Dr. Fleming is his attendant physician, and it is his opinion that his recovery is not possible.

Miscellaneous News.

There is a match factory at Curwensville, Clearfield County, that makes 8,000,000 sticks a day.

Suspected Arson in Altoona.

ALTOONA, Pa., Sept. 20.—The large planing mill and lumber yard of S. I. Fries, and five dwelling houses in this city, were burned to the ground this morning. Loss, $40,000, insurance, $12,000. James Prigley, a dissolute character, has been arrested on suspicion of setting fire to the lumber.

Barnum's Elephant Jumbo Dead.

ST. THOMAS, Ont., Sept. 16.—Jumbo, the $300,000 elephant, was killed on the Grand Trunk Air Line track, half a mile east of here, last night. His keeper was leading him along the track, when a fright train came up behind, unnoticed, and ran him down. He was injured so badly that he died in 30 minutes. The trick elephant Tom Thumb was also injured, his leg being broken.

Huntingdon's Car-Works Sold by the Sheriff.

HUNTINGDON, Sept. 18.—The Huntingdon Car and Wheel Works, lately owned by Blair Bros., were sold at Sheriff's sale this afternoon to Colonel Wm. Dorris, trustee for the bondholders, for $7,000. The works are computed to be worth $80.000. The bonded debt is $35,000. The bondholders, therefore, in effect bid $42,000. The intention of the purchasers is to protect themselves and dispose of the works advantageously to other parties.

Hazed and Killed by his Schoolmates.

HAZLETON, Pa., Sept. 20.—A young son of Edward Turnbach died here today from the effects of a hazing received last Wednesday at the hands of several of his schoolmates. The scholars of a public school to which young Turnbach had just been admitted, make a practice of initiating new scholars by making them run the gauntlet through two lines of ten to twenty boys on each side, they punching the victim with their fists as he passes through. They injured the little fellow so badly in the region of the kidneys that he died today in great agony.

A Bold Bank Robbery.

A daring burglar entered the banking house of J. H. Looms & Son, in Altica, a small village in New York, at one of the rear windows, in the morning at half-past eight o'clock, while the cashier was sweeping the banking room. The cashier had taken $1000 from the safe and placed it in the cash drawer under his desk. The robber after jumping in the room, knocked the surprised cashier senseless, and rifled the drawer of its contents. He fired one shot at the prostrate cashier, and the report gave the alarm to the postmaster, next door, who with the assistance of the citizens captured and bound the robber and shipped him off to the nearest prison. The cashier soon recovered from his injuries.

A Terrible Prairie Fire in Dakota.

STEELE, Dak., Sept. 18.—A terrible prairie fire raged north and west of here all day yesterday. Reports from Sterling, eighteen miles west, are that farmers in that region lost everything. Passengers on last night's east-bound train report seeing numberless stacks of wheat on fire at the same time near here. The losses in grain range from 1,000 to 3,000 bushels to each farmer. Mrs. W. L. Bedford, living seven miles from here, inhaled the flames while "fighting fire," and is in a critical condition. The fire is still raging.

At Buffalo, Dakota, the fire destroyed 200 stacks of wheat on Wm Howden's farm, 150 acres belonging to Wylie, three harvesters and binders of Mr. Aldrus, and did great damage elsewhere.

An Organ Factory in Flames.

BOSTON, Sept. 18.—Shortly before 7 o'clock to-night a fire broke out in the manufactory of the Smith American Organ Company, corner Montgomery and Claredon streets. The building is a five-story brick structure, 150 feet on Montgomery street, with an L running back some 75 feet on Claredon street. The fire originated on the third floor. The fire spread to the fourth and fifth stories very rapidly. Numerous streams were brought to bear on the fire and the flames on the third floor were soon subdued. In the meantime, however, the fire had reached the varnish room, on the fifth room, and soon the entire upper floor was a mass of flames, burning with the greatest fierceness in the L. The fire at this writing (8.45 p. m.) is still burning fiercely. There is no danger of the fire communicating to the surrounding buildings and the peculiar situation of the burning building is most favorable to the firemen. The loss will probably be heavy.

APPLICATIONS FOR SPACE.

Advices from New Orlerns state that applications for spaces in the various buildings of the American Exposition, to open on November 10th, are daily pouring in from States, cities and large business farms in all parts of the United States; while the countries of Mexico, Central and South America, as well as important places in Europe, are sending in a large quota, in fact, where at the outset, the filling of the oceans vacant space caused the promoters of the enterprise no inconsiderable amount of anxiety, the situation has in the past few months been entirely reversed and the management deem it their duty to inform those intending exhibitors who have not yet applied for space to do so at once, ere it be too late. While this is, of course, a very gratifying state of affairs, that the management is able to announce, still it shows the necessity of city and individual exhibitors who have thus far failed to make applications for space doing so immediately. There is no longer any question of the success of the American Exposition; it has been constructed upon sound business principles; it is operated by business men, to solve the commercial problem of the day—the securing of an outlet for our surplus manufactured products. The non-manufacturing countries of Spanish and Portuguese America are looked to for the relief needed. At the coming Exposition they will contrast their resources with ours, and afford the opportunity of reaching an early understanding for the establishment of business relations of mutual advantage. This question of new trade relations for merchants of the Unitd States necessitates prompt action on the part of our manufacturers and business men, in order that they shall be represented in the magnificent Exposition to take place in New Orleans, this winter.

MULTUM IN PARVO.—McDonald's Great Blood Purifier or Sarsaparilla Alterative is the most highly concentrated, most harmoniously and skilfully combined of all the blood medicines offered the public. Many certificates from well-known and worthy persons could be furnished to substantiate the virtues claimed for this great medicine, but the manufacturer prefers simply to say any purchaser feeling the benefit derived from the use of a bottle not equivalent to the seventy-five cents invested in the purchase can have their money returned.

—The schools of Millheim borough will commence on Monday, October 19, and the announcement also leads us to remind the parents that it is of the greatest importance to have their children ready in all respects to start in on the first day. Fathers and mothers, do not withhold the grand opportunity of free education from your boys and girls, do not be tardy in sending them to the schools, because every day lost is so much taken from the children's time for learning, and the result of negligence in the attendance of school can be no other than ignorance. Remember that for downright ignorance now-a-days there is no excuse. The school system is such that all children may receive a fair and sufficient education to fit them for the requirements of daily business life and it is the duty of all parents to see to it that the minds of the young generation may be enlightened in all the useful and necessary branches.

QUAKER
Is the Best
TABLE SAUCE.

Thousands of articles are now manufactured that in former years had to be imported, paying high import duty as it is now being done on Lea & Perrins table sauce; the QUAKER TABLE SAUCE takes its place; it has been pronounced by competent judges just as good and even better. The QUAKER SAUCE has Slowly but surely gained great importance and is replacing the very best imported sauce on the shelf of the grocer, the tables of the restaurant and the tables of the rich and poor men, greatly prized and relished by all on account of its piquancy, aroma, taste, strength and pureness. The inventor has by years of study of the secret virtues contained in the aromatic spices of the Indies and China, such as mace, nutmeg, cinnamon, genuine Jamaica ginger, and peppers and buds of trees unknown to most men, and by long practice succeeded to combine their extracts in such a liquid form as we now find it, of agreeable taste, and so invigorating as to be taken in place of stomach bitters. By manufacturing this sauce here, heavy import duties and freights are saved, and it is sold at a lower figure to the dealer, who making a better profit on Quaker Sauce can sell it to the consumer cheaper than the very best imported article hardly equaling ours. If your grocer does not keep it, write us for prices, etc. Sold in bottles or by the gallon.

A Black Cork Screw Suit for $3.80.

He Felt Discouraged.

He had a wearied, sad-eyed expression, as if booked for a funeral and was awaiting the hearse and mourners. A sympathetic friend sought to sound the secret of his woe. The wearied man responded:

'I feel discouraged.'

'Tut? You musn't give way to grief in that despairing way. You know what the poet sang: 'Hope springs eternal in the human breast.''

Ah, yes! But it ain't for me. When man's seen what I've seen hope ain't for him.'

'Bless my soul, what can have happened?'

'I'll tell you. Mayhap it will give relief. You know how steady I've been sitting up to Miss Hopsnood?'

'Everybody knows you sat up to her like a sick kitten to a warm stove.'

'She encouraged me, and I felt I was solid till first one and then another got to whispering that she was sitting Gus Tomurill out'n out. I wouldn't believe a word of it. Didn't she go with me to ice cream parlors two or three times a week and picnics, and didn't that show I was solid? So I believed she was all right and wouldn't hear to a word contrary.'

'That's right: Don't never listen to busybody talk:'

'That's what I was determined till to-day. A person told me a little while ago that he saw Tom Mill escorting Kate home from the matinee. That didn't worry me. I knew he was all right and thought everything of me. So I started up to call on her. It wasn't my night to pay my regular visits, but I wanted to go, just to show them I knew it was all right. I met her ma at the gate. She said I'd better not go in. That sounded queer, but I did not let it bother me at all. Then the old man—he was smoking his pipe under a tree—he clipped in; said he guessed Kate wasn't expecting me to-night. That was queer, too. Still I wouldn't allow myself to be discouraged. I was sure Kate could explain everything, no matter how it looked. On the stoop I met Kate's little sister. She kind of snickered, and had a curious cute look in her eyes as she said: 'Kate won't be'l like to see you to-night.' This was the queerest of all. But still I wouldn't give way. Something told me to keep a stiff upper lip and not be discouraged. And I determined I wouldn't. So I walked right into the parlor, and then—'

'What?'

'I saw Kate sitting on the lounge with that Tom Mill—he with his arm round her waist and she with her head flopped down on his breast.'

'Then you gave way?'

'Then I felt discouraged and came away.'

Just Like Jonah.

'I am sure baby must be sick,' said a Stockton man to his wife. 'He has been crying incessantly for the last three days.'

'Yes, baby is just like Jonah that you read about in the Bible the other day,' said the smart boy of the family.

'Why?' inquired the father.

'Because he has been in a wail for three days.'

And then there was weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth.

Surface Indications

What a miner would very properly term "surface indications" of what is beneath, are the Pimples, Sties, Sore Eyes, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions with which people are annoyed in spring and early summer. The effete matter accumulated during the winter months, now makes its presence felt, through Nature's endeavors to expel it from the system. While it remains, it is a poison that festers in the blood and may develop into Scrofula. This condition causes derangement of the digestive and assimilatory organs, with a feeling of enervation, languor, and weariness—often lightly spoken of as "only spring fever." These are evidences that Nature is not able, unaided, to throw off the corrupt atoms which weaken the vital forces. To regain health, Nature must be aided by a thorough blood-purifying medicine; and nothing else is so effective as which is sufficiently powerful to expel from the system even the taint of Hereditary Scrofula.

The medical profession indorse AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and many attestations of the cures effected by it come from all parts of the world. It is, in the language of the Hon. Francis Jewett, ex-State Senator of Massachusetts and ex-Mayor of Lowell, "the only preparation that does real, lasting good."
